Sequential Art Project Reflection

In my comic I used both screens from a game, as well as pictures taken from actual big tournaments. To have the images, which are mixed with both real life and non-real life, match better together on the paper I used a sketch filter so they would appear more similarly. Finally for the text, I repeated the phrase "I can win" over and over, however I left who is saying that and the connotation in which it is being used purposely ambiguous.

Watering down the elements that make anything difficult can leave the pros worried for multiple reasons. Even newcomers who do not have nearly as much experience can still leave the pros worried with if they can win, which is why I left it ambiguous as to who was saying "I can win" in the comic. Also having the way you do things change so you are working harder than necessary can make it harder for the pros to succeed, so even the pros have to worry about whether they can win or lose to people who are just starting out.
